In this seminar, we emphasize the adoption of a holistic, multidisciplinary approach to treating eating disorders, including psychological therapy, medical management and family support.

As she says, ‘what originally presents at the clinic is the tip of the iceberg’. She sees common themes in each patient and family who attend her clinical practice in Vancouver, Canada, despite treating a wide variety of multi-cultural patients/families: there are similarities. Embracing a wide range of cultures has called for a flexibility in areas of treatment. Ms. Kitchener also, generously, shares insights from her own personal and multi-generational family experience of ED. Threaded throughout her talk will be examples of what was successful and under what conditions.
